ROYAL TREATMENT FROM OUR SCOTTISH COUSINS

Stuart M. Wallace, Savannah, Georgia

Having read Bob Wurtz's article "Lucky?" in the winter 1995 issue of Family History Capers, I was reminded of my experience in finding Scottish cousins, but without the language barrier.

In 1988 I found a family name, Grieve, from Scotland in the Genealogical Research Directory from a party in Australia. I wrote to him for the details about the Grieves, and he responded, "I am not related to you, but you have a cousin in Moffat, Scotland." He gave me her address and name, Diana Sinclair, so I wrote her and received a prompt answer that we were related. Further correspondence led to more cousins in Dalkeith and Edinburgh with their names and addresses. I wrote to each, and exchanged known and unknown facts of the Grieves, Morrisons, Wallaces, Russells and Whites. Through these cousins I learned of three more relatives, the Chambers of Edinburgh, Willsher of St. Andrews and Thornley in Rhu which is near Glasgow. All of this letter writing extended over three years. In each instance they asked my wife and me to visit them.

In 1991 we decided to go to Scotland and visit them, but we were concerned about traveling from one cousin to the next by bus, train or car along with our baggage. Fortunately, one of the cousins took charge, and told each cousin when we were coming and that each was to drive us to the next one. A couple of phone calls cemented the plans. We flew to Glasgow, where the take-charge cousin, Jean Thornley, met us and drove to her home in Rhu. Before we arose the next morning she brought us tea and toast with jam to our bedroom as an eye-opener. We toured about that area of Scotland, then into Glasgow along the Clyde River, and to the Burrell Collection with its Egyptian, Greek and Roman art, carpets, paintings and furniture. Next day we drove to Loch Lomond, saw various waterfalls coming from the mountains, and Glencoe where the Campbells slew the McDonalds. Precisely at 4 p.m. we stopped along the roadside for hot tea (thermos-packed) and cake! At home she cares for ten acres of rhododendrons of various species and a rock garden. For a vacation she hikes in the Himalayans while in her 70s!

Next Jean drove us to Moffat to Diana Sinclair and husband, Hugh, where they live on a small farm. With Diana driving we visited mountain waterfalls, toured a castle, picnicked along the way and saw the Devil's Beef Tub which is a gigantic depression along the road where the Scots raided the English cattle and drove them to the Tub for slaughter.

Then Diana drove us to Peebles, home of the above named ancestors, where we met cousins, Robert and Jean Bartholomew and Jean Faithfull, of all places, in the local cemetery. There we found the burials and gravestones of the Grieves, Morrisons and Russells, and photographed them. In the meantime Diana had found a new White relative in Peebles whose wife prepared dinners for large crowds, so the husband "volunteered" her services for a lunch for eight of us. It became a minor banquet which included, of course, a champagne toast to the Grieves and Whites!

After lunch the Bartholomews drove us to Dalkeith where we visited Jean Faithfull's husband, Montie, then on to the Bartholomews in Edinburgh. We had extensive tours of Edinburgh, including the libraries for a wee bit of research, and the castle. The next day we returned to Peebles for more in-depth record seeking, revisitation of the cemetery, a view of the David Grieve home, now part of a golf course, the home of the Morrisons, now a bank, and the homes of the Russells and Chambers. We continued to nearby Prestonpans, northeast of Peebles, to search for the graves of the Morrisons, but without any luck. We continued to the Bartholomews' cottage for a picnic lunch followed by hiking through the adjacent hills where residual Pict Forts remain. That evening the four of us went to the Military Tattoo - very good.

The next day the Bartholomews drove us across town to cousins Tony and Denise Chambers. Following lunch with the six of us, the Chambers drove us along the waterfront and stopped at a restaurant where Robert Louis Stevenson had his settings for some of his novels. Then it was on to various gardens, to the castle with its various royal relics, and then to Tony's 'Old Boys Club' for drinks and dinner.

The next day the Chambers drove us to St. Andrews. Along the way we stopped at fishing villages and ships museums. We arrived in heavy rain at cousin Betty Willsher's home where, after tea, the rain ceased, and we toured the town with the schools and cemeteries with many dilapidated cathedrals. Following church we drove along the coast where we walked the beaches and visited fishing villages.

Monday we awakened to the news that the Russian Government was overthrown. We toured the famous St. Andrews Golf Course where there was a nearby military air force base with many planes in the air. We wondered if the government was on an alert for the Russians, but nothing happened. We toured the bishop's Palace which had been heavily shelled by the French. The fragments from the Palace had been used to build homes, and Betty's home which was built about 1750 had a cannonball embedded in the exterior wall.

It was a most enjoyable and unique trip, courtesy of so many cousins who treated us like royalty. They were most generous with adding their genealogical records to mine. Having cousins on the scenes where our ancestors lived made that occasion more true to life.

Message: it pays to advertise.

His troops were assigned the task of going in after the planned explosion of the Confederate fortifications. The troops supposed to support them on each side never came in. All of the men were either killed or taken prisoner. My father was taken prisoner and escaped at Columbia, South Carolina, as Sherman approached from the sea. He had entered the service weighing over 200 pounds. When he got back to the Union troops after his imprisonment he weighed 98 pounds!
